Burt, his composer son, Alfred and family friend Wila Hutson; for many years these three collaborated to create the original carols, which were then sent to friends as Christmas cards. The fifteen carols as published are arranged in three sets. The carols within each set were chosen to provide a variety of healthy and facilities of transition from one carol to the next so that each set can be performed as a songlist program group: Caroling, Caroling long ago, O Hearken Ye, Nigh Bethlehem, all on a Christmas morning, he will dress the house, Ah, Bleak and Chill Wintry Wind, Cometh Caroling's Christmas, Some Children See Him, Jesu Parvule, Bright, Bright, The Holly Berries, The Star Carol, Carol of The Mother, What Are the Signs, Christ in the Stranger's Guise, Coming, Dear to the English Recipient of Victoria's Cross, see Alfred Alexander Burt. Only one of the carols was made in public outside immediate family circle during his life. Burt's early life was born in Marquette, Michigan. His family moved to Pontiac, Michigan when he was two years old after his father, Bates G. Burt (1878-1948), became rector of All Saints Pontiac, an episcopal church in Pontiac. At the age of 10, having interested in music, Alfred received his first musical instrument, a cornet, as a gift from his parents. Although he will learn to play many other instruments, including the piano, Alfred spent most of his life playing cornet and trumpet in bands and orchestras, with a particular interest in jazz. Burt studied music at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, with an emphasis on music theory. He graduated as an outstanding music theory student with a Bachelor of Music degree in 1942. A tradition that the elder Burt had begun before moving to Pontiac in 1922, was the creation of a Christmas card, which he sent to family members and parishioners. On these cards were original Christmas carols, with words and music from Reverend Burt. After Alfred graduated from college, his father asked him to take over as a composer and write the music for the 1942 family Christmas card, Christmas Cometh Caroling. Since then, Alfred has been writing the music for the family's Christmas cards. World War II and after During World War II, Burt served as an officer in the United States Army, stationed in San Angelo, Texas. While there, he served with the Army Air Force Band and topped the Houston Symphony as a trumpeter. His father sent him the lyrics for carols from Michigan, first in 1943 (Jesu Parvule) and then in 1944 (What are the signs). Burt completed the music from his base. Burt married his childhood love, Ann Short (August 14, 1922 - November 30, 2000), on October 13, 1945. Eventually earning his discharge in early 1946, he formed a short-lived band; After the group broke up, he and Anna returned to Michigan to spend time with his father. The 1947 Christmas card, Nigh Bethlehem, was the last collaboration between Alfred and Bates Burt. Reverend Burt died of a heart attack in early 1948. Alfred and his wife chose to continue handing over the family Christmas card in his honor. Burt continued his career in New York as a musician and orchestrator/composer. He also worked as a teacher at The American Theatre Wing vocational school, where he collaborated with Helen Hobbs Jordan[1] (April 6, 1907 – April 26, 2006) on a side reading book. Burt's professional life joined the Alvino Rey Orchestra in 1949. Meanwhile, Anna remained in Michigan, where Birch's only child, Diane Bates Burt, was born on March 8, 1950. While pregnant, Anna, in consultation with Alfred, asked an old family friend, Wihla Hutson (1901-2002), the organist at reverend Bates Burt's church, to write the lyrics for the annual Christmas card, which she then it would put on the music. This carol, titled Sleep, Baby Mine (or Mother's Carol) was a lullaby for their unborn child. In the spring of 1950, Alfred, Anne and 61-year-old Diane moved to Los Angeles, California. Burt continued his professional career as an orchestrator and musician for bands such as Hal Richards, Horace Heidt and Alvino Rey. Over the next few years, and as a Burch Burch circle, i.e. increased, the Christmas card list increased from 50 to 450 people. But still, Alfred Burt Carroll remained unknown outside the Burch's growing mailing list. That changed with the 1952 talent, come on, dear children. Burt finished writing the music during a rehearsal with Blue Reys, the vocal group with Alvino Rey's orchestra. He asked them to sing it to make sure the harmonics were working. They liked it so much that they asked Burt if they could sing it at the King Sisters' annual Christmas party. It turned out to be a hit among party guests, and served to introduce Burt's carols to Hollywood. The Burt-Hudson collaboration continued until Alfred Burt's death in 1954. Illness and death In early 1953, Burt complained of a persistent virus and fatigue. Eventually agreeing to a thorough medical examination, he was diagnosed with terminal lung cancer. He spent his final months at home in Pacoima, California. James Conkling, wife of Donna King Conkling, and at the time the president of Columbia Records, was informed of Burt's health failure and organized the project, assembling an all-star chorus of Hollywood singers to perform Burt's four part harmonics. The recording sessions for the oldest carols took place in late 1953 at North Hollywood LDS Church with Burt present to conduct from his wheelchair. Meanwhile, to fill the album, Burt had taken on four new carols. One of them, Hearken Ye, was sent as the 1953 family Christmas card. For the first time, Alfred knew his carols would be recorded. Burt finished the last of his carols, The Star Carol, on February 5, 1954. Less than two days later, he died. The Star Carol will be used for the final Burt family Christmas card that holiday season. The artwork and printing card was donated by Columbia Records with a staff photographer providing the photo of the little girl looking at a Christmas ornament. A lot of people thought it was Al's daughter, Diane Burt. First recordings of carols Original cover of The Christmas Mood, in which 12 of Burt's carols first appeared. Twelve of Burt's carols were released in time for the 1954 holiday season on a 10-inch vinyl album called The Christmas Mood (Columbia CL 6336). The album was credited to The Columbia Choir, under the direction of Bud Linn and produced by Edwin L. (Buddy) Cole, as his lp jacket credits, who was at the time yvonne king cole's husband. The Christmas mood was recorded by the Columbia Choir under the direction of Grafton (Bud) Linn in St. Michael and All Angels Episcopal on Coldwater Canyon Ave. in Studio City, California, of which Alfred was an assistant choir director and both he and his wife, Anne, were members. The album remained in print for several Christmas seasons. In 1955, the original 10-inch LP was reissued with a new catalog number (CL 2546) as part of the short-lived Columbia House Party Series, which was designed to keep the 10-inch album alive even as most labels most of their new LPs on 12-inch drives. In 1957, the album was reissued once again, this time on a 12-inch LP as CL 1051, including an instrumental brass ensemble, a medley of carols arranged and conducted by Ralph Carmichael. The Columbia Choir's original album did not include Christmas Cometh Caroling, What Are the Signs, and Sleep Baby Mine, also titled The Carol of the Mother. Capitol Records tennessee artists Ernie Ford, Fred Waring and Pennsylvanians and Nat King Cole recorded Burt's carols. In 1958, Ford recorded The Star Carol for his first full Christmas music album and named the entire album of songs after that. Star Carol (Capitol T/ST 1071) peaked on The Billboard #4 over the Christmas period of 1958-59 and reappeared on either the main LP charts or the special Christmas charts for a decade thereafter. In 1959, Waring recorded the Christmas LP The Sounds of Christmas (Capitol T/ST 1260), and six of the Alfred Burt Carols appeared in it: Caroling, Caroling, O Hearken Ye, Jesu Parvule, The Star Carol, Come Dear Children, and This Is Christmas (the latter also known as Bright, Bright the Holly Berries). Finally, Cole recorded Caroling, Caroling on the 1960 album The Magic of Christmas (Capitol W/SW 1444), which was reissued under the title The Christmas Song in 1963 and has remained in print ever since. Simon and Garfunkel recorded The Star Carol in 1967, which was released on LP A Very Merry Christmas. [2] The first recording of all 15 of Alfred Burt Carols was released in 1964 by the voices of Jimmy Joyce called This Is Christmas: A Complete Collection of Alfred S. Burt Carols (Warner Bros. WWS 1566). The recording was produced by Anne S. Burt, Alfred's wife, and James Conkling, president of Warner Bros. Records. The recording engineer was Lowell Frank. The unusual 8-part vocal harmony arrangements were written by Alfred's lifelong friend, Brinley Bethel. The tracks were recorded during a three-day session in Hollywood on September 9, 10 & 11, 1963. The recording was nominated for a Grammy in 1964 in the category of Best Pop Instrumental Performance. In 1964, there was no category for a cappella vocal music, so the work was placed in the instrumental category. He lost to Henry Mancini's Pink Panther theme. Caroling's Legacy, Caroling and Some Children see him being the most recorded carols written by Alfred S. Burt. Other recordings by Alfred Burt Carols include Simon and Garfunkel's 1967 recording of The Star Carol, Andy Williams & Kenny Loggins' versions of Some Children See Him, George Winston's 1982 performance of Some Children See Him and James Taylor's 2004 recording of Some Children See Him. The Unlimited recorded six of the Alfred Burt Carols on their 1972 album, Christmas. [3] The Gas House Gang has also recorded Burt carols on their CD in 2000 Some Kids See Him. John Williams wrote two medleys from Alfred Burt's works for Boston Pops Pops one from the album Joy To The World (TNK 48232) and another for the album We Wish You A Merry Christmas (Philips 41627). In 1990, Julie Andrews recorded This Is Christmas in a hallmark recording, The Sounds Of Christmas from Around the World, with the London Symphony. Natalie Cole recorded Caroling, Caroling on Holly & Ivy's 1994 album. Both the Christmas mood (VAG Records 4223) of 1954 and this is Christmas (VAG Records 4222) of 1964 was remastered in 1995, and many of the pieces from these recordings were used to celebrate the 50th year of carols for [The Alfred Burt Christmas Carols Golden Anniversary (VAG Records 4225). In 2001 Burt's granddaughter, the composer Abbie Bettinis, revived the family tradition of sending Christmas cards with an original carol every holiday season, which he also introduces every year on Minnesota Public Radio: The Christmas Carols Cometh Caroling (1942) Jesu Parvule (1943) What are the Signs (1944) Ah, Grim and Chill the Wind Wintry (1945) All on a Christmas Morning (1946) Nigh Bethlehem (1947) Christ in the Stranger's Guise (1948) Sleep Baby Mine (1949) This is Christmas (also known as Bright , Bright, The Holly Berries) (1950) Some Children See Him (1951) Come On, Dear Children (1952) O, Hearken Ye (1953) Caroling, Caroling (1954) We'll Dress The House (1954) The Star Carol (1954) Reports ^ Wakin, Daniel J.
